1 hour of CLE credit for Kansas and Missouri requested.

Finding housing, transportation, employment, treatment, and other services for clients can be the difference in whether a client remains in pretrial custody. Incorporating community resources into a release plan is essential because pretrial detention increases the chance of conviction, increases the chance of a guilty plea, increases the resulting sentence, and increases the rate of recidivism.

But how to find these resources for your clients? A panel of investigators and assistant federal defenders from Wichita, Topeka, and Kansas City will share resources they've located and how to access these resources. And they'll discuss legal strategies for effectively presenting these options to the court.
